Study Space is a series of intensive workshops, held at diverse locations around the world, the goal of which will be to acquire a deeper understanding of the legal, policy and human challenges posed by the global growth of megacities. Study Space intends, at various times and in different places, to provide a vehicle for progressive scholars and graduate students from varied disciplines and backgrounds to study, learn and seek to understand experientially this trend in all of its implications - for identity and self-determination, for participatory democracy, for equality and social justice, for human health, for the environment, for livable cities and manageable land use, and so on.

Cuba was a Colony of Spain until its independence was won in 1899, following military intervention by the United States and the Spanish American War. After the defeat of the Spanish, Cuba remained under a US military government until 1902, at which time the US oversaw the creation of a new government. The influence of both United States and Spanish rule on Cuban Law were present decades into the future. For example, the Spanish Penal Code influenced the 1936 Civil Defense Code of Cuba, and the influence of the United States appeared in the form of a supreme court of appeals and judicial review. Following the triumph of the Cuban Revolution on January 1, 1959, much of the Constitution of 1940 was reinstated. In the aftermath of the Revolution, the Congress was supplanted by a Council of Ministers, consolidating greater power in the hands of the revolutionary government. In the years to follow, the revolutionary government enacted hundreds of laws and decrees with the aim of affecting basic change in Cuba's socio-economic system. New institutions, such as the Revolutionary Courts and People's Popular Courts were created to carry out these laws. These and current developments will be the focus of this LatCrit Study Space Seminar and Professional Research Trip.
